Economics and the Common(s): From Seed Form to Core Paradigm

Exploring New Ideas, Practices and Alliances

Berlin, Germany, May 22–24, 2013

One of the most significant impediments to positive social change is the entrenched power of market-fundamentalism as an economic and political paradigm. The prevailing dogma is that only a scheme of individual self-interest, expansive individual property rights, market exchange and globalized free trade can advance human well-being. This view has increasingly been called into question as the predatory dynamics of the market economy became clear and as its threats to the biosphere have become more acute.

ECONOMICS AND THE COMMON(S): FROM SEED FORM TO CORE PARADIGM seeks to open up some new vistas in politics, economics and culture by exploring the commons as an alternative worldview and provisioning system. A rich array of commons – in nature, cities, civic life, the Internet, and many other realms – are showing that commons can provide stable, equitable and ecologically benign alternatives to conventional markets.

The Economics and the Commons Conference (ECC) will expand and empower this work by exploring the commons as a coherent field of inquiry and action. It will convene approximately 240 commoners – researchers, practitioners and advocates from around the world – to explore the relationship of conventional economics and the commons, showcase key actors and initiatives, and devise plans for moving the commons paradigm forward. Special care will be taken to avoid a “sectoralization” of commons discussion because we believe that a coherent “general narrative” of the commons nurtures global social change and applies across many different sectors of commoning.

Among the questions to be asked: What core principles of commoning can be identified across different resource domains? What makes a commons so generative? In what circumstances can commons-based provisioning models substitute for conventional markets, or interact constructively with markets? How can the protection and re-creation of the commons be made an integrated part of productive processes?

The Economics and the Commons Conference (ECC) will be hosted by the Heinrich Böll Foundation (hbf) in cooperation with the Commons Strategies Group, The Charles Léopold Mayer Foundation and Remix the Commons. The event will take place at the headquarters of hbf in Berlin from May 22 to 24, 2013. Optional side-events on topics such as communications strategies for the commons, governance of global commons, and others, will be held on May 21-22 and 25.

Goals of the Conference

The ECC seeks to show the breadth and feasibility of commons-based provisioning and forge a coherent narrative and analysis about it and the next steps for action. Substantive discussion at the conference will therefore focus on several key themes:

- The commons as a way to move beyond conventional economics;
- Alternative economic and provisioning models;
- The transformations needed to move to a new type of economy.

Process

More than fostering an exchange of information, the conference is intended to help build new working relationships, personal commitments, and a group ethic of listening to each other. Active participation by everyone will be vital. This will be facilitated by an online wiki (www.p2pfoundation.net/ecc2013), which will include a bibliography, profiles of participants, and other resources to be determined. The conference is designed as a working session among key thinkers, activists and project leaders to build shared critiques and set up common goals.

We invite you to contribute to the whole by:

- Being Present. Host yourself first and be willing to put up with the chaos of thoughts and shared ideas. Keep your mind open and be prepared to deal with the uncertainty of not knowing and learning.
- Co-creating. Blend your knowledge, experience and practices with the knowledge, experience and practices of others to co-create wise action.

Special care will be taken to avoid a “sectoralization” of commons discussion. We believe it is important to develop a “general narrative” of the commons that applies cross-sectorally. Even with differences in the rivalrous/nonrivalrous nature of resources, certain principles and ethics of commoning can be seen in each case.

Side Events

Participants are invited to attend one or more Side Events that will take place on May 21 and 22 and on May 25 at various locations in Berlin. More information can be found at: http://p2pfoundation.net/ECC2013#Side_Events. Or you can contact one of the convenors. Confirmed Side Events include:

Conference Communications

To help people inter-connect more easily at the conference – and with the wider global audience of commoners and the public – we have two Internet platforms that we will be using:

Conference wiki: <http://p2pfoundation.net/ECC2013>

Conference communications platform: <http://commonsandeeconomics.org>

Twitter hashtag: #forthecommons

A list of conference participants will be made available on the conference program and the ECC wiki (www.p2pfoundation.net/ecc2013).

Conference Programme

All participants are invited to attend the plenary keynotes and subsequent discussions. For those who urgently wish to discuss a specific topic, self-organized breakout sessions are possible on May 22 from 2:30 to 5:00 pm. However, the afternoon of May 23, from 2:30 to 5:00 pm, is the preferred time for such meetings.

All keynote talks will be web-streamed and video-recorded. Simultaneous translations will be made available only in Large Auditorium 1+2.

reconceptualize this domain as commons? How exactly does needs-based production work?*

Each breakout session has its own assigned room.

Stream #1: Integrating Theory and Practice in the Management of Natural Commons

Hosted by Saki Bailey (Italy)

Large Auditorium 2

Throughout the world, neoliberal economic policies have had destructive effects, resulting both in the degradation of natural environments as well as reductions in fair access to shared resources.

This dynamic can be well seen in the aggressive privatization of water systems in large metropolitan areas like Berlin and Naples, which has resulted in price increases, lower quality water, reduced access to water and less democratic control. Although a flourishing anti-privatization movement in both Europe and the Global South has arisen, much of this advocacy does not have the analytical and theoretical tools to push for a paradigm shift in the economic organization of our natural resources as a commons. This stream will bring together legal scholars, ecological economists and commons advocates to develop commons-based policies and models for governing shared natural resources, especially water and land.

Methodology: The session will utilize a “snowball” and a “reversal snowball” method for facilitating discussion broken into three phases: First, we will break up into a land group and a water group, and if necessary, into additional sub-groups. The groups will prepare a summary of how the principles of the commons framework apply to the management of their resource. Second, the sub-groups will reconvene, present their experiences to one another and come up with a integrated presentation as well as a list of questions and suggestions for reworking the framework/model.

Finally, the groups will meet all together and again present their different findings, modify the model as needed, and synthesize a final document.

Stream #2: Doing Away with Labor: Working and Caring in a World of Commons

Hosted by Heike Löschmann (Germany)

Small Auditorium 1 and 2

While global development policies deprive commoners of use rights to natural commons, a new ecology of collaborative production is (re)emerging beyond markets, money and organizational hierarchies as we know them. The lines between production and consumption are becoming blurred by social practices of sharing and (indirect) reciprocity. These practices are providing innovative answers to the fundamental question of how to (re)produce our livelihoods. Yet, most of the time, they do neither recognize “the whole of work,” which means to overcome the structural division between productive work and care work (education, health, eldercare, household level, etc.), nor do they reduce embedded gender imbalances in the performance of these activities. And yet, the emerging new patterns bear the potential for a historical transformation toward a model that we could term “(re)prosumption.” It could provide alternatives to both globalized capital(ism) and “national-developmentalism,” and overcome structural causes of gender inequality and the markets externalization of care and nature services. While most trade unionists focus on the labor market and a fair distribution of available employment, the work of the future may no longer be a “product” that is bought and sold in the market, but one that can be managed as a commons.

Methodology: In the first breakout session, we will provide the opportunity to move between six thematic “speaker’s corners” where particular sub-issues of the framing keynote talk will be featured. Participants will be able to move from speaker to speaker as they choose. This will be followed by a reflection session and open debate. The second breakout session will provide working time to explore the idea of looking at the “capacity to work” as common pool resource and how it can essentially be managed as a commons.

Stream #3: New Infrastructures for Commoning by Design

Hosted by Miguel Said Vieira (Brazil)

GLS Bank, opposite HBS Building

One of the main challenges in advancing commons as a stable paradigm is to find ways to develop commons-friendly infrastructures. Many existing systems favor practices that tend to be commons-unfriendly (e.g. fossil fuel-based individual transportation) or generate negative social and environmental impacts (e.g., nuclear power and even “clean” energy sources). While some infrastructures have progressive dimensions (using distributed networks, promoting local access), they may be minor parts of larger, regressive infrastructures that still depend upon individual transportation, centralized power grids and concentrated industrial structures. Yet there are important lessons to be learned from commons-based infrastructures such as Internet protocols, which have fostered the emergence of countless digital information commons. An urgent need of our time is to ensure that infrastructures can “by design” foster and protect new practices of commoning.

Methodology: This stream’s first session will focus on traditional, existing infrastructures in order to try and identify what features bias them for or against commoning. The second session will discuss ways to move forward: alternative approaches to infrastructure (new proposals and emerging practices) that are designed to favor commons, or that are commons in themselves.

NOTE: This period is also reserved for those who urgently wish to convene self-organized sessions on topics of their own choosing (cf. programme view).*

commons seriously, for example, we might begin to see that copyright and patent are not just knowledge enclosures, but “modern” ways of enforcing privileges and inequalities in what may be known and communicated. Similarly, open access and use is not necessarily an emancipation, but rather a shift in control to those who own a given digital platform. This Stream will attempt to (re)consider and (re)conceptualize the free/libre/open/commons movements from a strategic and commons-first perspective.

Methodology: Both sessions will feature fast-paced interventions, debates and working breakouts. The first session will engage with the big picture: all commons as knowledge commons, and knowledge commons as commons, first and foremost. The second session will dive deeper on what a “commons-first” reconceptualization means for knowledge commons movements. The stream may generate more questions than answers, but we hope to identify some principles and provocations that will be useful to commoners in the years ahead.

Post-Conference Side Events from 9 am to 5 pm at the HBF building, as announced here http://p2pfoundation.net/ECC2013#Side_Events

Conference Organizers

The Commons Strategies Group and Heinrich Böll Foundation are the joint organizers of this conference, which is an outgrowth of the landmark International Commons Conference (ICC) in Berlin in November 2010. That event brought together about 180 commons activists, academics and project leaders from 34 countries, and started a cross-disciplinary political and policy dialogue about the commons in diverse international settings.

Building on the energy from that conference, CSG in cooperation with Heinrich Böll Foundation has just completed a major book anthology of 73 essays on the commons that has been published in German and English. CSG principals have made dozens of presentations about the commons at various conferences, universities and public events. This Economics of the Commons Conference (ECC) is a logical next step in working with networks of commoners around the world to advance the commons paradigm.

The Charles Léopold Mayer Foundation has supported the attendance of some partners to the International Commons Conference that took place in November 2010 in Berlin and wishes now to continue its support by co-funding the ECC regional consultation process.

Both FPH and HBF consider the commons a key element for the transition toward commons-based economics and cultures. Both foundations focus their strategic support toward this end, either in cooperation with partners or through their own initiatives. This “cross-granting” partnership between two European foundations seeks to advance a new culture of collaboration among like-minded political actors and funders. Both foundations believe that a culture of dialogue, sharing and common programmatic approaches among grant makers is a necessity.

Remix the Commons is another partner in organizing and hosting the ECC. A Montreal-based project that focuses on multimedia communication about the commons, Remix the Commons is especially focused on how to improve public education and popular communications about the commons.

Steering Committee & Key note speakers: Short Bios

Bailey, Saki (Italy/US). J.D. & PhD Candidate Goethe University Frankfurt am Main. Executive Director of the Institute for the Study of Political Economy and Law of the International University College of Turin (IUCT), Lecturer in Human Rights at IUCT. She is also Director of 'Occupying the Commons: Teatro Valle Occupato.' Publications include: 'Social Movements as Constituent Power: The Italian Struggle for the Commons.' Indiana Journal of Global Legal Studies (spring 2013, coauthored with Ugo Mattei) & 'Legalizing the Occupation: The Teatro Valle as a Cultural Commons.' South Atlantic Quarterly 112:2 (spring 2013).

Bauwens, Michel (Thailand/Belgium). Founder of the P2P Foundation which researches on peer production, governance, property and the open, free, participatory and commons-oriented modes of human cooperation, co-founder of the Commons Strategies Group. He is also the author of a number of on-line essays, including a seminal thesis 'Peer to Peer and Human Evolution' and 'The Political Economy of Peer Production', which are available at p2pfoundation.net

Bendell, Jem (UK). Founder and Director of the Institute for Leadership and Sustainability (IFLAS - www.iflas.info), strategist and educator on social and organizational change, with 18 years specializing in responsible business development, alliances for sustainable development, transformative philanthropy and sustainable currencies. With over 100 publications, including UN reports, he is an award-winning authority on business and sustainable development and has helped create a number of leading multistakeholder alliances. He serves on the board of CommunityForge, which is a leading provider of open source software for community currencies. He was chosen by the World Economic Forum as a Young Global Leader.

Bollier, David (US). Internationally active independent scholar and activist on the commons who blogs at Bollier.org; co-founder of the Commons Strategies Group; co-founder of Public Knowledge, a Washington policy group on Internet and copyright policy; co-founder of the Commons Law Project with Professor Burns Weston; co-author of Green Governance: Ecological Survival, Human Rights and the Common (2013); co-editor of The Wealth of the Commons: Beyond Market and State (2012); author of Viral Spiral: How the Commoners Built a Digital Republic of Their Own (2010).

Botero, Carolina (Colombia). Activist, consultant and lawyer with Master degrees from universities in Belgium and Spain. She is an author and lecturer on free access, free culture and authors' rights. She leads the Group Rights Internet and Society at Karisma Foundation and serves as Legal Lead for Creative Commons Colombia and Regional Project Manager for Creative Commons in Latin America.

Farley, Joshua (US). Professor of Ecological Economics at the University of Vermont. His broad research interests focus on the design of economic institutions capable of balancing what is biophysically possible with what is socially, psychologically and ethically desirable. His work suggests that common ownership is required to solve many of the most serious ecological and economic predicaments we currently face. He is co-author with Herman Daly of Ecological Economics, Principles and Applications, 2nd ed. Island Press (2010), and numerous journal articles and book chapters related to the commons.

Gottschlich, Daniela (Germany). Political scientist at Leuphana University in Lüneburg, academic interests concentrate on theories of international politics, sustainable development and feminism. She analyses how environmental policy focusing on sustainability can contribute to democratising democracy.

Helfrich, Silke (Germany). Independent author and activist, primary author of the German speaking CommonsBlog, co-founder of Commons Strategies Group and former head of the regional Heinrich Böll Foundation's office for Central America, Mexico and Cuba. She engages with activists, academics, business people and politicians, and travels throughout Europe to explain the strategic value of the commons. She is the editor of several books on the Commons, among them: Who Owns the World? The Rediscovery of the Commons and co-editor of The Wealth of the Commons beyond Market and State.

Linksvayer, Mike (US). Software developer, consultant, Senior fellow and former Chief Technical officer and Vice-president of Creative Commons, board member of AcaWiki, OpenHatch, and Software Freedom Conservancy, chair of the Open Definition Advisory Council, co-founder of Bitzi (early open content/open data mass collaboration platform). He has been an advocate for free software and related movements since 1990 and published one of the first interviews with Linus Torvalds in 1993. Contributor to The Wealth of the Commons and author of Future of Copyright.

Löschmann, Heike (Germany). Social anthropologist, she lived and worked in South East Asia, for 14 years. Her access to the politics of the commons is the result of this field experience where she was exposed to the misgivings of international development and unfair trade policies and the resulting struggles of people for self-reliance and subsistence, community based resource management, fair trade and gender justice. In her current position as head of department for International Politics in the Heinrich Böll Foundation, she is the lead person for the Foundation's programmatic work on the Commons.

Rodotà, Stefano (Italy). Professor of Law at La Sapienza University of Rome, co-author of the European Charter of Fundamental Rights, chair of the Scientific Committee of the Agency for Fundamental Rights of the European Union and of the Internet Governance Forum in Italy, former President of the Italian Data Protection Commission and the European Group on Data Protection, former Member of the Italian Parliament, the European Parliament and the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

Schuster, Ludwig (Germany). Architect by profession whose engagement in currency design began with a competition on „shrinking cities“. He founded the REGIOprojekt agency for endogenous regional development, and tried to implement the idea in Weimar, Germany. He was one of the initiators of the first International Scientific Conference on „Monetary Regionalisation“, followed by the 4th German Regiogeld-Kongress. He is currently working on an „energy savings currency“ or „NEGAWATT loyalty program“ for one of the largest cities in Germany as well as continuing his research in energybacked currencies, applications for financing renewable energies, and currency design in general.

Svampa, Maristella (Argentina). Sociologist, writer, researcher at the Conicet (National Center for Scientific and Technical Research), professor at the Universidad Nacional de la Plata, coordinator of the Group of Critical Studies of the Development and member of collectives 'Plataforma 2012'.

Among her books are: Entre la ruta y el barrio. La experiencia de las organizaciones piqueteras (2003); La sociedad excluyente. La Argentina bajo el signo del neoliberalismo (2005), Cambio de época. Movimientos sociales y poder político (2008); Minería Transnacional, narrativas del desarrollo y Resistencias sociales (2010), Debatir Bolivia (2010) 15 mitos y realidades de la minería transnacional en Argentina, (2011).

correo@maristellasvampa.net, <http://www.maristellasvampa.net>

Unmüßig, Barbara (Germany). President of the Heinrich Böll Foundation, a position she has held since 2002. At the foundation, she is responsible for its strategy and development for Latin America, Africa, Asia, Middle East and for the Gunda Werner Institute for Feminism and Gender Democracy. Her work focuses on issues of globalisation, international climate and agricultural policy, national and international gender policy and the promotion of democracy and conflict prevention. She stands for the Foundation's support to the commons movement and its search for transformative policies beyond market and state.

Vieira Miguel Said (Brazil). Researcher and activist in the field of free knowledge and culture, currently preparing a PhD thesis on 'Intellectual commons and commodification' at the Education faculty of the University of São Paulo – a critical reading of the Ostrom school and the possibilities of commodification linked to new business models. Member of Scientiae Studia, a philosophical association focusing on societal impacts of technoscience. His publications can be found at <http://impropriedades.wordpress.com/artigos>.

Weber, Andreas (Germany). Berlin based book and magazine writer with a background in Marine Biology and Cultural Studies. He focuses on a re-evaluation of our understanding of the living: he proposes to understand organisms as subjects and hence the biosphere as a meaning-creating and poetic reality. Accordingly, Andreas holds that an economy inspired by nature should not be designed as a mechanistic optimization machine, but rather as an ecosystem which transforms mutual sharing of matter and energy in a deepened meaning. Author of: Alles fühlt. Mensch, Natur und die Revolution der Lebenswissenschaften (Berlin 2007); Biokapital. Die Versöhnung von Ökonomie, Natur und Menschlichkeit (Berlin 2008).

Participants: Short Bios

Linardos, Petros (Poland). Co-founder of FreeLab (collective in Poland aiming at helping intentional communities with technical knowledge and support).

Aguilar, Nils (Germany). Franco-German sociologist and filmmaker. His first feature “Voices of Transition” is an awarded documentary aiming to serve socio-ecological movements and to facilitate the launch of new transition town initiatives.

Aigrain, Philippe (France). Computer scientist and analyst of the stakes of knowledge governance.
